Duty to notify Modern Slavery

In June 2014 The Modern Slavery Bill was introduced in the House of Commons to ensure law enforcement has stronger powers, perpetrators receive suitable severe punishment and victims are better protected and supported. From 1 November 2015, specified public authorities have a duty to notify the Home Office of any individual encountered in England and Wales who they believe is a suspected victim of slavery or human trafficking. The 'duty to notify' provision is set out in the Modern Slavery Act 2015, and applies to all Police forces and local authorities in England and Wales.

Changes to Deprivation of Liberty Safeguards

The Law commission has published a report and draft Bill on 13th March 2017 setting out recommendations. The final report and draft Bill recommends that the DoLS be repealed with pressing urgency and sets out a replacement scheme for the DoLS – which is called the Liberty Protection Safeguards. In addition the draft Bill makes wider reforms to the Mental Capacity Act which ensures greater safeguards for persons before they are deprived of their liberty. It is now up to the government to decide whether to take the commission's recommendations forward. You can find further information and access all the documents via
